Col. Roosevelt's Plain Duty

We have not noticed any indication that Colonel Roosevelt contemplates a visit to Idaho so that he may face the music and make himself personally responsible for his criticisms of the Idaho supreme court. It is all well enough for him to commend those who have become martyrs in his cause in Idaho; but why should he not share that martyrdom himself? A manly man will hold himself responsible at all times and in all places for his utterances. He is the man who made the criticisms, for the publication of which the Boise Capital News men are under jail sentence and required to pay each a fine of $500. Of course, Colonel Roosevelt can easily make up the fine to them, because he is a rich man, and has many rich political alliances, the chief of these being Mr. Perkins, the great head of the Harvester trust. The payment of the fine will, we suppose, be made by Colonel Roosevelt, for it would be absolutely indecent in him, rolling in wealth as he is, to allow the Boise newspaper men to be compelled to pay this money out of their own pockets.

But that hardly meets the case. The question is, will Colonel Roosevelt come to Idaho and make himself responsible to the Idaho court for the language he uttered in criticism of that court, and which that court so deeply resents that it punishes the managing editor and publisher of the Boise Capital News merely for printing Colonel Roosevelt's language as part of the news of the day. On this question the Springfield (Mass.) Republican has this editorial reflection:

The Idaho editors who published Mr. Roosevelt's tart comments on the state supreme court's decision in an election case got punished for contempt in spite of Mr. Roosevelt's characterization of the court's action as an outrage. One cannot help asking whether, in case Mr. Roosevelt had made his remarks in Idaho, the court would have ordered his arrest and sentenced him to pay a $500 fine and spend ten days in jail.

Evidently our Massachusetts contemporary has come to the same conclusion as we expressed a few days ago, that Colonel Roosevelt, as a manly man, should make himself responsible for his words, that responsibility to be faced where challenge is made of his criticism; that is, before the supreme court of Idaho. If he does not do this, he is clearly lacking in the full measure of manhood; for the language was his, the complaint of that language as made by the court, which also undertakes to punish on its own complaint, is really and primarily against him. Why then should Colonel Roosevelt hold back from his clear personal responsibility in this matter? Why should he not go to Idaho and invite the court to deal with him in place of those who merely published, as news, his words?

As we have pointed out heretofore, he would undoubtedly be entirely safe in doing this; he would not run any danger of imprisonment or fine, for, being a citizen of New York, and his criticism made in New York, he could take his case at once to the federal court, and we have not the least doubt but that the federal courts would free him, on the eminently just and fair proposition that in criticizing the Idaho supreme court he merely exercised his undoubted rights as a citizen. What, then, is to prevent his doing the fair and manly thing by his adherents in Idaho? The practical certainty that he would inflict the severest kind of a blow upon the Idaho supreme court by taking this course should commend it to him as a fighter, as the right and desirable thing to do; for the court would suffer, not he; he would undoubtedly win a great triumph over it. Let Colonel Roosevelt come to Idaho then, and vindicate himself and at the same time vindicate the right of the press of the United States to print the news free from the censorship of narrow and mean-minded, bigoted, and contemptible courts.

The next time we observe the word Adrianople in print it will probably be a stomach bitters advertisement.

The Important Thing In Drug Selling

The average customer of a drug store cannot, in the nature of things, be informed as to whether the drugs he buys are of proper quality or the medicines he procures are properly compounded.

You Must Rely Upon Your Druggist

for that and the druggist who deserves patronage must be the one who does supply the adequate knowledge and experience and who constantly exercises his knowledge for the benefit of his customers.

We do that. We exercise our knowledge, care and judgment all the time. We guard customers' interests in every way.
